Why is Analog Devices acquiring Linear Technology?

This is the right combination at the right time. In this competitive market, our customers are looking for partners in their innovation, engineering, and world-class supply chain support; not just suppliers. The addition of Linear Technology's highly complementary portfolio of technologies and products to our own will create the industry's most comprehensive suite of high-performance analog offerings. More importantly, this transaction will combine two of the industry's leading engineering teams, creating an unparalleled innovation powerhouse capable of helping customers address their most complex analog and market challenges.

When is the transaction expected to close?

This transaction has been unanimously approved by the boards of directors of both companies. Pending necessary shareholder, regulatory approvals and other customary closing conditions, we currently expect this transaction to close in the first half of calendar year 2017.

What is the combined revenue of Analog Devices and Linear Technology?

The combined revenue of Analog Devices and Linear Technology for FY2015 was approximately $5 billion.

What will be the name of the combined company?

The combined company will continue to be called Analog Devices, Inc.

Until the close, we remain two independent companies. During the interim period though, we will be working closely with Linear Technology to ensure a smooth integration and transition upon close.

Will the Linear Technology brand remain standalone, or will it be integrated into Analog Devices like Hittite?

Analog Devices intends to maintain the Linear Technology high performance power management brand.

How many employees does Linear Technology have?

Linear Technology has approximately 4,900 employees worldwide.

The announced deal price ($14.8 billion) is significant – how will Analog Devices be financing this combination?

Analog Devices intends to fund the transaction with approximately 58 million new shares of ADI common stock, approximately $7.3 billion of new long-term debt, and the remainder from the combined company's balance sheet cash. The new long-term debt is supported by a fully underwritten bridge loan commitment and is expected to consist of term loans and bonds, with emphasis on pre-payable debt, to facilitate rapid deleveraging.

ANALOG DEVICES MANAGEMENT (REACTIVE)_QA

The announced deal price ($14.8 billion) is a lot of money – how will Analog Devices pay for Linear Technology?

Analog Devices intends to fund the transaction with approximately 58 million new shares of ADI common stock, approximately $7.3 billion of new long-term debt, and the remainder from the combined company's balance sheet cash. The new long-term debt is supported by a fully underwritten bridge loan commitment and is expected to consist of term loans and bonds, with emphasis on pre-payable debt, to facilitate rapid deleveraging.

How did Analog Devices arrive at the purchase price for Linear Technology?

The price we paid is a fair one for a unique, high quality business with the best financial model in the industry.

Does this acquisition mean that Analog Devices won't be able to do other acquisitions in the near future?

Our primary focus in the near term will be to successfully integrate Analog Devices and Linear Technology. We will also consider doing smaller, tuck-in transactions to acquire technologies and businesses that allow us to complement and grow our existing business and enhance our market competitiveness.

Will the acquisition of Linear Technology change our overall business strategy?

No. Our two companies are strategically aligned, we play in similar applications, and most importantly, we share similar values founded upon engineering excellence, innovation, and a passion for our customers' success. Moreover, we believe that Linear Technology's capabilities are highly-complementary with Analog Devices' offerings and that the ability to deliver a diversity and breadth of product offerings and highly-innovative solutions will be a critical differentiator as customers carefully select their long-term innovation partners.

How will we successfully combine our two different cultures into one?

Analog Devices' and Linear Technology's values are very similar. Like ADI, Linear Technology values engineering excellence and customers' success. Our respective management teams will work together to combine the strengths of each company's culture to create something greater than the sum of its parts.

Our external communications indicate that the transaction will drive $150 million in synergies. What do you mean by that?

First, we should make clear that the primary driver of this combination is the opportunity to create an unparalleled innovation and growth engine within the high performance analog market, not synergies or cost efficiencies. Having said that, when you combine two standalone public enterprises, there will be some inefficient overlap and duplication of resources in certain areas, which we will need to address. As we do so, our guiding principle will be to invest in and maximize our ability to successfully develop innovative products, deliver them to market and fully support our customers while optimizing the way our combined organization works together. While meaningful cost savings in some areas will be a natural result of that process, we expect the leading impact will be the opportunities we create as an even bigger, stronger, more competitive company. Our aim is to create something that is ultimately more – not less – than the sum of its parts. We're committed to keeping you updated as we plan and progress through the integration process.

Once combined, which functional areas are most likely to be impacted by overlap and inefficiencies?

It is still very early in the planning and integration process but our guiding principle will be to preserve and maximize our ability to successfully develop innovative products, deliver them to market, and fully support our customers. We expect to minimize corporate overlap across the combined company, benefit from increased purchase power, and target some COGS and supply chain efficiencies.

Will this overlap/inefficiency require job cuts or facility closures at Analog Devices or Linear Technology?

It is too early in the planning and integration process to provide clarity and guidance in this area. We are committed to keeping you updated as we plan and progress through the integration process.

If any employees lose their jobs as a result of the transaction, will Analog Devices offer severance and/or outplacement assistance?

It is premature to discuss specifics at this time. What I can tell you is that all employees can expect to be treated with fairness and respect, and will be provided with appropriate assistance, in keeping with existing policies.
